Flies are everywhere. They use their feet to taste things. They walk on the rotten food and plants, collecting germs on their feet. From there they settle on fresh food, leaving germs everywhere. They also spread germs when they eat. A fly can eat only liquids. So a special juice is pumped from the fly's stomach to turn solids into liquids. The fly might suck food that has germs in it. Thus some of the germs get into the fly's stomach. If this fly pumps some of the stomach juice on your food, the germs get on the food. If you eat it, the germs get into your body.

Now answer the questions given below:

- Q.1 What organ of their body do the flies use to taste things?
